Last Psychologist Lectures

DR. NEAL MILLER

by Lillian Moir

A Yale psychologist and former Bellingham resident wound up a series of lectures on "New Dimensions in Intellect" Monday evening with a speech on "Fear and Courage" in the college auditorium.

Dr. Neal Miller, Yale Psychologist

Dr. Neal Miller defined fear as a drive than an individual can use to turn a possible disaster into a constructive action. However, fear can lead to destruction, if not met, he said. The most important factor about fear is not the fear itself, but the method by which it is handled, according to Dr. Miller.

The nationally-known psychologist and president of the American Psychological Assn. cited as an example the student who, fearing a test, avoids studying instead of coming to grips with the fear. Dr. Miller emphasized that this is different from the lazy student.

Dr. Miller's speech drew an older audience than the previous speakers.

Many attending were professionals and understood the more technical portions of his lecture.

Dr. Miller followed Dr. Jerome Bruner and Dr. Gordon Allport, both Harvard psychologists, who spoke on "The Educational Processes and Its Dimensions" and "The Psychologist's Image of Man." The three appeared under a grant from the Bellingham Chamber of Commerce.

Dr. Miller is the son of Dr. Irving Miller, a former chairman of Western's Department of Education.

Skin Diving Takes Western

Skin diving, which has taken the country by storm, has found its way to Western's campus.

The Viking Sounders, a club of 30 members, which was founded in January of this year, represents the college in its undersea activities. The club was instituted by several interested persons who took their time and effort to interest and give instruction in the proper use of diving equipment to novices.

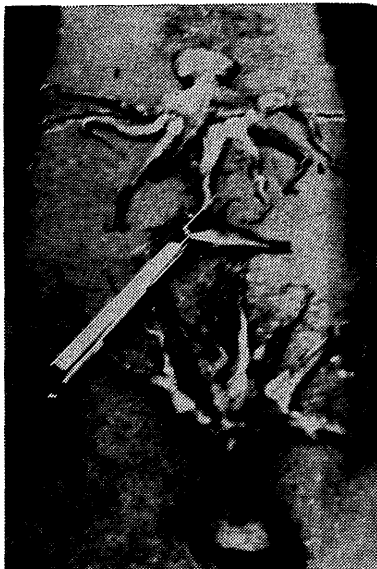

Many of the club members have found the course a useful aid in biology classes. Specimens found on the floor of Puget Sound could only be shown by picture, but with the advent of diving, the real thing can be presented to the class. Also the club members supplement their food bills with delicacies from the sea floor.

According to club instructor Ken Baker, the Puget Sound offers many interesting species and affords some of the best diving known. There are few if any dangerous species in the Sound, which makes diving more comfortable.

Last week, the Sounders held what they hope will become a frequent event, a picnic and dive at the Key-area allowed extended dives to the depths of 50 to 60 feet. These dives were rewarded with the capture of several octopuses ranging in size from 4 to 8 feet. Also taken by speargun were several cod, sea bass, perch, and an "Irish Lord," a type of sea-going cat fish.

According to the divers the only problem with taking a trip like this is that it makes the polluted waters of Bellingham Bay even more intolerable.

If enough persons are interested, the Sounders will be offering instruction again next fall. Divers do not need full equipment to receive instruction, but knowledge of the proper methods in the use of equipment is a must before attempting the art. The club would welcome any new members for the rest of the summer session also. Interested persons are asked to contact Mr. Paul Benedict (RE 4-1027) or Mr. Ken Baker (RE 3-4261).

stone ferry terminal on Whidbey Island. Loaded with scuba gear and spearguns, the Sounders and their families spent the day exploring beaches and underwater haunts off the breakwater where the ferry, "Defiance," begins and ends its hourly run to Port Townsend.
